ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

On 5 December 2014, the U.S. Department of State published a detailed analysis of China's maritime claims in the South China Sea in LIS No. 143.

On 6 May 2009, Malaysia and Vietnam submitted a joint request to the UN Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf (CLCS) to extend the limits of their sovereignty over the continental shelf in the southern part of the South China Sea beyond 200nm. On 7 May 2009, in response to the joint submission to the CLCS, the PRC forwarded to the United Nations a Note Verbale which stated that "China has indisputable sovereignty over the islands in the South China Sea and the adjacent waters, and enjoys sovereign rights and jurisdiction over the relevant waters as well as the seabed and subsoil thereof (see attached map)." The map attached to the Note Verbale has been commonly referred to as the "9-dash line map". (Between 2009 and 2011, there were a series of communications to the UN from China, Malaysia, Viet Nam, the Philippines, and Indonesia regarding the joint Malaysia-Viet Nam submission to the CLCS.)

In January 2013, the Republic of the Philippines (RP) officially took steps to bring China before the Permanent Court of Arbitration in the Hague under Article 287 and Annex VII of UNCLOS, regarding certain disputes over the interpretation and application of UNCLOS (summarized here). Among RP's claims are that China's nine-dash line map is "inconsistent with the Convention and therefore invalid." In May 2014, there were an additional series of communications (scroll down to "Additional relevant material") to the UN from Viet Nam and China regarding a Chinese oil rig in a disputed part of the South China Sea.
